

Visit to Newlathes Manor House, Newlathes Road, Horsforth, and Kirkstall Abbey

Saturday 28 September 2024 led by Peter Thornborrow

Meet at 10.30 am, first half hour outside.

Earlier this year I visited Newlathes Manor, Horsforth, with Dr Alastair Laurence when he showed the local history group round. The owners have agreed to permit me to bring up to 20 members to visit.

It's a complicated building but in essence is an aisled hall with a rear aisle under a low sloping catslide roof heated by a large segmental-arched stone fireplace set next to the original rear Tudor-arched doorway – probably the kitchen originally. It has a separate Housebody with 17th century panelled walls, and original doors with metal catches. Its ceiling has a pair of hefty chamfered spine-beams with unusual timber sleeves that probably cover scarf-joints – evidence for a bressummer fireplace (now gone).

The attached former two-storey Parlour wing, now a small cottage, has the remains of timber-framing (wall-plate, corner posts and braces) and a large external chimney stack for fireplaces on both floors.

Of greatest interest is the four-bay aisle arcade visible at the first floor in a corridor the length of the building with board-and-muntin panelled walls set between jowled posts, with mortices for large braces, and principal rafters that have trenched purlins supported by an aisle-tie with an angled strut. The end bay has stone walls and windows on two sides with an angled corner fireplace. Here the timber structure is covered by more plank wall panelling, the styles with reeded edges, incorporating nine panels of Tudor linenfold panelling, very fine and rare carved with a cross design suggesting ecclesiastical origin; perhaps from the Prior's lodging at nearby Kirkstall Abbey which we will visit in the afternoon.

The south front is very unexceptional and has walls rendered with stucco struck with false joints suggesting it may be Regency alteration c1800, except for the stone cottage that projects forward.

The listed building description ends with 'History: occupied by Pollard family (purchased by them in 1566) until c.1800. Development of the building complex and obscure'. So, it would appear that after the dissolution of the monasteries (1545) the house, perhaps a grange of the Cistercian Abbey (founded in 1147) was sold with the Manor of Horsforth in 1566 and some of the fine 16th century panelling was incorporated into the building.

Directions to Newlaites Manor House

From Horsforth Roundabout on the A6120 Ring Road, come via the A65 New Road Side (towards Kirkstall and Leeds) and continue some way into the middle of the town, passing Tesco Express (on right). After traffic lights by a modern shop, Rainbow, turn right down Newlay Lane and continue until it bears to the left. Turn right here up Newlaites Road – a long straight road, go on to just before the bottom, until you meet a junction with Newlay Grove (on left) and Abbey Court (on right). The road to the Manor House is near the entrance to Abbey Court on the left. Park on one of the nearby residential roads with consideration for the local residents.

Lunch

Please make your own arrangements for lunch. There is a Starbucks and a KFC close to the large Horsforth Roundabout on the edge of the Horsforth Ring Road. There is also a large Toby Carvery (2 Fink Hill) – drive back to the large Horsforth Roundabout and turn right on Broadway (A6120); it's on the left after the start of the dual carriageway.

Kirkstall Abbey

After lunch, we'll reassemble at Kirkstall Abbey at 2pm. Kirkstall Abbey has two museums, one in the former cloister features a re-created Victorian street, done by Peter Brears when he was director of Leeds City Museums, inspired by the one at the Castle Museum York where Peter was previously director.
