

Extraordinary Yorkshire Buildings

Saturday 14 March 2020
9.30am to 4.30pm

York St John University,
De Grey Lecture Theatre, York

This day school takes a look at three extraordinary buildings, two recorded by the Group, from different parts of the Yorkshire region, and invites an acknowledged expert within their field to put that building in context in a more general talk.

The venue is the De Grey Lecture Theatre of the York St John University in York – see map overleaf. Tea, coffee and biscuits on arrival, a buffet-style sandwich lunch, and other refreshments at intervals through the day are all included. Bookstall. The programme may be subject to change. Booking Form overleaf.

The talks start at 10am after registration. The day school will be followed at 4:30pm by the AGM of the YVBSG.

Extraordinary Yorkshire Buildings, Saturday 14 March 2020, 9.30am to 4.30pm

- Ingleby Manor, North Yorkshire: The Eures' 16th century defensive house – David Cook

Built by the Eures of Witton Castle in the mid sixteenth century as a 'defensive house', and the only example of this type in the eastern half of Yorkshire. Sold to Sir David Foulis, a Scottish knight, prominent at the court of James VI whom he accompanied to England in 1603. Partly rebuilt by Sir David and re-fashioned in Scottish Baronial style. Hear the key findings from David of this mammoth seven-year recording project by a dedicated team led by our President, Barry Harrison, who wrote the detailed report.

- Defensible Buildings in Northumberland – Peter Ryder

For the last forty years Peter has been studying the wide variety of fortified dwellings found in the region, from castles to medieval hall-houses and towers, to fascinating bastle houses. He will share his vast and unique knowledge with us that will help to put Ingleby into its regional context.

- The restoration of Carbrook Hall: from Civil War HQ, to a pub, and a Starbucks! – Peter Thornborrow

This unassuming seventeenth century wing of a large demolished mansion is an important survival of the seat of the Bright family. Built in the 1620s for Captain Stephen Bright it contains two of the finest panelled rooms in the North, with outstanding fireplaces and a decorative plaster ceiling. Peter will unravel its complicated story, helped by the team of recorders at the recent Sheffield weekend.

- Decorative Plasterwork in Yorkshire 1570-1670, with particular reference to the Sheffield area – David Bostwick

In the Sheffield area the wealth of the iron-masters and lead-merchants ensured a steady flow of commissions for decorative plasterwork during the seventeenth century, comparable to the houses in the cloth production areas around Halifax and the administrative centre in York. David will share with us his research from his doctoral thesis (1993) that he has revisited in recent years that will put Carbrook into context – a rare opportunity to hear from the acknowledged expert on the subject.

- Scout Hall, Mr Mitchell's magnificent mansion – David Cant

The building was quite unlike others locally in size, style and layout. It combined classical and traditional features and was described by Pevsner as 'an improbable and ambitious palace'. From what we know about Mitchell, it reflected the builder's eccentric outlook on life. From what we know of David this will be a well-researched and fascinating story.

- Drawing out the evidence: Using reconstruction drawings as an aid to understanding historic buildings – Allan T Adams FSA

This talk will look at a variety of reconstruction and cutaway drawings that have been made to better improve our understanding of historic buildings. Allan will show how his amazing drawings can be used to test theories of the evolution of a building, presenting evidence in context within complex structures that bring the historic environment back to life. You're in for a visual treat!
